Gaga the Nun

Once upon a time, people were living in the darkness. In this darkness, a maiden had sprung from her mother's womb. From the very beginning, people were cursing her by reason of her evil manners. Some of the exorcists had visited several times to fix the maiden. Her family desperately abandoned her because the manners of the maiden had disturbed the church and the church had told her family that the maiden belonged to Satan, they had to abandon Satan. What had this maiden done to be abandoned? Did she deserve to live in misery? She was an extraordinary girl. When she was 17, she told her father that she had talked to God and she said that God had given her religious lyrics. The lyrics had been in conflict with the church's preaches, that's why nobody was on her side. Everybody had denied her visions, even her beloved ones. She did nothing wrong, but they told her that a woman was not able to receive visions conflicting with the preaches of the church. Women could only have visions that the priests had already known. Her appearance and her choice of clothes were also unique. She had been the victim of the darkness; now she was all alone, abandoned in the real darkness, wandering around the forest. Satan tried to approach her, but God did not let him. While she was crying all alone, a nun came to her. The nun took the maiden with her. It was God's order to take the maiden in his house, the nun was only a messenger. Unexpectedly, Gaga became Gaga the Nun and she was the evidence of God's will about women. God showed the women's worth to mankind, but instead of listening to God's words, the other church which had blamed her before decided to burn her and reflected her as a witch. She accepted her destiny because she knew when she was burned, she would be happy in heaven. Evil burned her, evil tore her into pieces and this evil was mankind. She was honorable and was killed because of mankind's sins.
